CRIMINAL LAW REFORM

Bail Reform. Tens of thousands of people in Michigan are locked up in jail, before being tried or convicted of any crime, because of cash bail. Throughout the state, it is common for judges to require people who have been arrested to post cash for their release—in other words, to buy their freedom—or else remain incarcerated while they await trial, even for very minor charges. In 2019 the ACLU filed a federal class action lawsuit against the judges of the 36th District Court in Detroit, arguing that this practice is unconstitutional because it creates a two-tiered legal system in which the freedom of a person who is presumed innocent depends entirely on their ability to afford bail, a clear violation of due process and equal protection. Locking people up while they await trial inflicts devastating harm on the lives of people who are arrested and their families, including job loss, child custody issues, eviction, and missed medical or educational commitments. This practice also coerces many defendants accused of lesser crimes to plead guilty just to get out of jail. And the harm caused by using cash bail falls disproportionately on people of color, who already bear the brunt of overpolicing and racism in the criminal legal system. In July 2022, after years of negotiations, we announced a historic settlement agreement with the 36th District Court that will overhaul the bail system in Detroit. The agreement will drastically reduce pretrial detention, limiting cash bail to cases where a judge finds, based on evidence specific to a particular individual, that the individual would present a flight risk or danger to the public if released. The agreement will last between two and five years, will involve regular reporting of data, and is expected to be a model for reforming bail systems in Michigan and around the country. (*Ross v. Police Taking Photographs and Fingerprints Without Probable Cause. Keyon Harrison, an African American 16-year-old, was walking home from school when he saw another youth with a model truck and paused to look at it. Grand Rapids police, who later claimed that two youth looking at a toy truck is so suspicious that it justifies a police investigation, stopped Keyon, took his picture, and fingerprinted him. Even though Keyon did nothing more than admire a toy, his picture and fingerprints are now in a police database. The Grand Rapids police have used this “photograph and print” procedure on about 1,000 people per year, many of whom are African American youth. Keyon and Denishio Johnson, another African American youth who was similarly printed and photographed, sued to end the practice. In 2017 the Michigan Court of Appeals issued a decision holding that the City of Grand Rapids could not be held liable because its policy only allowed, but did not require, the police to take photographs and fingerprints—a decision that would make it much harder to hold municipalities accountable for civil rights violations in state court. The ACLU of Michigan took over direct representation in the case and appealed to the Michigan Supreme Court. In 2018 the Supreme Court issued a major decision on municipal liability in favor of our clients, holding that cities can be held liable for authorizing unconstitutional conduct by their employees. The case was then remanded, and in 2019 the Court of Appeals ruled that forcing someone to provide their fingerprints is not a search under the Fourth Amendment. We appealed again, and in July 2022 the Michigan Supreme Court reversed, holding that fingerprinting is a search and the Grand Rapids policy violated the Fourth Amendment. (Johnson v. VanderKooi; ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Miriam Aukerman and Dan Korobkin; National ACLU Attorneys Nathan Freed Wessler and Ezekiel Edwards; Cooperating Attorneys Margaret Hannon, Ted Becker, and David Moran of U-M Law School.)

Youth Sentenced to Die in Prison. For over a decade, the ACLU has fought against Michigan’s cruel policy of allowing youth to be sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole. In 2010 we filed a class action lawsuit in federal court challenging the practice as unconstitutionally cruel and unusual punishment, resulting in a 2018 victory allowing hundreds of youth to be considered for early release and an eventual settlement in 2020. In 2021 and 2022 we joined the Juvenile Law Center in filing friend-of-the-court briefs in multiple cases that had reached the Michigan Supreme Court. In a series of opinions released in July 2022, the Michigan Supreme Court agreed with our position that the Michigan Constitution provides greater protections to youth facing life sentences. The Court held that a life sentence cannot be automatic for 18-year-olds, and judges must consider their youth at sentencing like they would for those under 18. The Court also held that for children charged with lesser, second-degree offenses, a life sentence (including with the possibility of parole) is categorically unconstitutional and cannot be imposed. Finally, in cases where prosecutors are still allowed to seek life-without-parole sentences for youth, the Court held that they must meet a “clear and convincing evidence” burden of proof. Hundreds of youth will now be eligible for resentencing based on these new, more protective, constitutional rules. (Hill v. Snyder; People v. Poole; People v. Stovall; People v. Taylor; ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio and Dan Korobkin; National ACLU Attorneys Steven Watt and Brandon Buskey; co-counsel Marsha Levick and Riya Shah of the Juvenile Law Center, Tessa Bialek and Sarah Russell of Quinnipiac University School of Law, and Deborah LaBelle.)

Retroactive Punishment Under Registration Law. For over a decade, the ACLU of Michigan has been challenging Michigan’s sex offender registration law which has barred people with past offenses from living and working in large portions of the state, and has subjected them to ongoing supervision and reporting requirements, in most cases for life, all without any consideration of individual circumstances. In 2012 the ACLU of Michigan, working with the University of Michigan’s clinical law program, challenged the law in federal court on behalf of six registrants—including a man who was never convicted of a sex offense and several men convicted of consensual sex with younger teens, one of whom he has since married. In 2016 the Sixth Circuit issued a groundbreaking decision ruling that the retroactive application of the amendments to those convicted before 2011 violates the United States Constitution’s rule against ex post facto laws. But despite the Sixth Circuit’s ruling, Michigan failed to bring its registry into compliance, leaving tens of thousands of other registrants at risk of prosecution unless they complied with the law’s onerous and unconstitutional requirements. Therefore, in 2018 we filed a class action lawsuit to ensure that all Michigan registrants obtain the benefit of the rulings in the earlier case. In 2020 Judge Robert Cleland ruled in favor of the class. Judge Cleland further ruled that the statute’s exclusion zones and certain reporting requirements are unconstitutionally vague for all registrants, and that strict liability prosecutions under the law are impermissible. In 2021 the Michigan Supreme Court, in a case where we filed friend-of-the-court briefs, also ruled that retroactive application of the statute is unconstitutional. Unable to enforce the old law, the legislature passed a new version which made only minor tweaks. In February 2022 we filed another class action challenging the revised law. The class was certified in May 2022. (John

Coerced Plea Bargains in Kent County. As part of the ACLU of Michigan’s ongoing bail reform efforts throughout the state, we learned that Kent County Chief Judge Mark Trusock was abusing the cash bail system to coerce criminal defendants into pleading guilty by raising their bail to unaffordable amounts, resulting in their immediate incarceration, if they rejected a plea offer and insisted on exercising their constitutional right to be tried by a jury of their peers. We partnered with local criminal defense attorneys to make a record of these coercive and unconstitutional conditions and challenged them on appeal. In June and July 2021 the Michigan Court of Appeals ruled in favor of our clients, finding that the judge had abused his discretion in each case. Unfortunately, Judge Trusock has continued the practice, and in August 2022 we were forced to file another appeal documenting the ongoing pattern. The Court of Appeals denied relief, but we appealed to the Michigan Supreme Court which ruled in our favor. (People v. Forbes; People v. Contreras-Reyes; People v. Majeed; ACLU Attorneys Phil Mayor and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Brett Stevenson, Bruce Block, and Matthew Berry).

Probation Program Without Due Process. Like many jurisdictions, Oakland County operates probation-style diversionary programs that allow individuals who are convicted of low-level offenses to serve their sentence in the community, subject to drug screening and other conditions, rather than serve jail time. However, in its aptly named “zero tolerance program,” the Oakland County Sheriff’s Office had appointed itself judge, jury, and executioner by unilaterally sending participants directly to jail, without even a court hearing, if they were accused of violating the program’s rules and conditions. In March 2022 the ACLU of Michigan filed an appeal on behalf of Marvin Kennedy, who was sent to jail for a year without a court hearing, challenging this blatant denial of due process. Shortly after we filed our appeal, Oakland County’s attorneys notified us that as a result of our appeal they were overhauling the rules of their program so that all participants suspected of violating the program’s rules will now be entitled to a court hearing to determine whether they did commit a violation and, if so, whether the violation should result in a jail sentence. In May 2022 the appeal was dismissed as moot. (People v. Kennedy, ACLU Attorneys Syeda Davidson, Phil Mayor, and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorney Will Nahikian).

The Right to Federal Postconviction Review. Anyone who is in state custody pursuant to a state-court conviction has the right to file a petition for habeas corpus in federal court to review the constitutionality of their conviction or sentence. Traditionally, federal courts have ruled that someone who faces significant restraints on their freedom is “in custody” for purposes of being able to seek federal court review. However, in the case of Frank Corridore, a federal district court ruled that his sentence of lifetime electronic/GPS monitoring and sex offender registration do not satisfy the “in custody” requirement because the restraints on his freedom were not significant. In April 2022 the ACLU filed an appeal on behalf of Mr. Corridore in the Sixth Circuit, arguing that lifetime monitoring and registration sentences are significant enough restraints on liberty to qualify a case for federal review. Mr. Corridore has his every movement tracked by state officials, must report in person four times a year, cannot travel anywhere that lacks good GPS reception or electricity, and is subject to public humiliation because he has to wear an ankle monitor for the rest of his life. The appeal could affect the ability of hundreds of people in Michigan to challenge their underlying convictions when they remain burdened by sentences that require electronic monitoring and registration. (Corridore v. Washington; ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Rohit Rajan, Dan Korobkin, and Miriam Aukerman; National ACLU Attorneys Yazmine Nichols, Allison Frankel, and Trisha Trigilio.)

Retroactivity of New Marijuana Law. Even though Michigan voters legalized marijuana in 2018, not all marijuana cases that were pending at the time were dropped. One such case involves Tierra Posey, who was prosecuted by the City of Troy for misdemeanor possession of marijuana. While her case was pending, the drug was legalized, but Troy refused to drop the charges. In 2020 the ACLU of Michigan filed an appeal in Oakland County Circuit Court on Ms. Posey's behalf. We argued that legalization of marijuana is retroactive as to all cases that were not yet final at the time the new law took effect. In January 2022 Oakland Circuit Judge Rae Lee Chabot ruled in our favor and held that Troy could not punish Ms. Posey for conduct that was perfectly lawful at the time of her sentencing. The city did not appeal, and dismissed the charges. (City of Troy v. Posey; ACLU Attorneys Phil Mayor and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorneys Robin Wagner and Robert Palmer of Pitt McGehee Palmer & Rivers; co-counsel Jayesh Patel and Charles Hobbs of Street Democracy.)

Funding Michigan's Court System. Unlike most public services, which are financed by taxes, our court system relies heavily on collecting crippling fines, fees, and costs from low-income criminal defendants in order to operate. This unjust system disproportionately impacts people of color, who are overpoliced and overcharged in our criminal legal system. It also undermines the perception that judges are impartial arbiters, as they have an incentive to find defendants guilty and impose high fines and fees because the money is needed to operate the court system. Working with the Detroit Justice Center and Street Democracy, in 2021 the ACLU of Michigan filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the Michigan Court of Appeals in a case challenging this practice as unconstitutional because it violates the due process right to a fair and impartial judiciary. In May 2021 the Court of Appeals rejected our argument. However, in October 2021 the Michigan Supreme Court requested briefing in another case raising similar issues, and we filed another friend-of-the-court brief and participated in oral argument, this time arguing that separation-of-powers principles prohibit judges from raising revenue for the courts because it is the legislature's job to fund the government. In June 2022 the Court announced it would set the case for additional briefing and reargument in the 2022-2023 term. (People v. Lewis; People v. Johnson; ACLU Attorneys Phil Mayor, Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio, and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Rubina Mustafa and Geoffrey Leonard of the Detroit Justice Center, Jayesh Patel of Street Democracy, Angela Tripp and Robert Gillett of the Michigan State Planning Body, and Ann Routt of Legal Services Association of Michigan.)

The Junk Science Behind Drug Recognition Experts. Now that marijuana is legal in Michigan, it is illegal for drivers to be impaired by marijuana use, but it is not illegal for unimpaired drivers to merely have some marijuana left over in their system. Responding to this change in the law, some law enforcement agencies are sending its officers to testify against drivers in court as so-called "drug recognition experts" claiming special expertise in detecting drug impairment. In February 2022 the Michigan Court of Appeals invited the ACLU of Michigan to file a friend-of-the-court brief addressing whether such testimony is admissible. We filed a brief surveying the scientific literature and arguing that such testimony should not be admissible under the rules of evidence. We explained that the techniques being used have not been rigorously tested or subjected to peer review by scientific experts, the available evidence shows that the techniques often falsely detect drug impairment, and the vast majority of scientific experts have rejected it as a reliable tool. We argued that instead of giving officers the veneer of expertise, courts should limit officer testimony to any personal observations they may have about a particular driver's conduct or appearance. (People v. Bowden; ACLU Attorneys Ramis Wadood, Rohit Rajan, Phil Mayor, and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Jessica Zimbelman of the State Appellate Defender Office.)

Legal Hurdles to Holding Law Enforcement Accountable. College student James King was walking down the street in Grand Rapids when two men stopped him, demanded to know his name, and took his wallet. Thinking he was being mugged, Mr. King ran. The men followed him, pinned him to the ground, beat him, and choked him until he was unconscious. The men were not actually muggers, but rather officers from a federal-state task force who had mistaken Mr. King for a fugitive. King sued both the officers and the United States Government in federal court, and the case went to the United States Supreme Court to decide whether a ruling that King could not sue the federal government also barred him from suing the officers individually. In 2020 the ACLU filed a friend-of-the-court brief arguing that the so-called “judgment bar” of the Federal Torts Claims Act does not prevent individual federal law enforcement officers from being held accountable for misconduct. Unfortunately, in a February 2021 decision the Supreme Court disagreed, creating yet another obstacle to holding federal officials accountable for misconduct. (Brownback v. King; National ACLU Attorneys David Cole and Jenessa Calvo-Friedman; ACLU of Michigan Attorney Miriam Aukerman.)

DISABILITY RIGHTS

Police Take Dog After Owner Calls for Help. Dale Bryant, a Black man and double amputee who uses a wheelchair and lives alone in Taylor, is the loving owner of a German Shepherd puppy named King whom he adopted for companionship and to eventually train as a service animal. One day when King's leg became entangled in his crate and Mr. Bryant was unable to free the dog, he called 911 to make sure the situation did not worsen and lead to an injury. But instead of sending help, the city sent police officers who made discriminatory comments about Mr. Bryant's disability, accused him of mistreating King, took King into city custody, and filed criminal charges against Mr. Bryant. After the ACLU of Michigan helped Mr. Bryant retain a pro bono criminal defense attorney, it took nearly four months for charges to be dropped and for King to be returned home. We then discovered that Taylor maintains offensive policies warning its police officers that “persons with disabilities often rely on their disability to attempt to manipulate and control their environment,” and that individuals they encounter “may be handicapped, but they are not stupid, and expect you to empathize with their overt condition.” Unfortunately, Taylor is only one of many cities where emergency response personnel consist mostly of armed police officers who are trained to charge someone with a crime rather than social services equipped to address the needs of people with disabilities. In September 2022 we filed a federal lawsuit seeking damages for Mr. Bryant and new training and policies for Taylor police officers. (Bryant v. City of Taylor; ACLU Attorneys Syeda Davidson, Mark P. Fancher, and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorney Jennifer Grieco of Altior Law; defense attorney Allison Kriger.)

Right to Counsel in Civil Commitment Hearings. When the state seeks to have someone involuntarily committed for inpatient mental-health treatment, that individual is entitled to a hearing, and the state will appoint an attorney to represent them. However, courts have not decided whether the right to counsel in such circumstances is a constitutional right, and if ineffective assistance of counsel violates such a right. In 2021 the Michigan Court of Appeals invited the ACLU of Michigan to file a friend-of-the-court brief addressing these questions. We filed a brief arguing that people facing civil commitment have a constitutional right to effective representation, noting that the hearings often result in the deprivation of a person’s liberty and there is a significant risk of wrongful imprisonment absent effective assistance from an attorney. In February 2022 the Court of Appeals issued a published opinion adopting our position and setting precedent for the entire state. (In re Londowski; ACLU Attorneys Rohit Rajan and Dan Korobkin.)

Performance Cancelled Because Actors Have Down Syndrome. DisArt is a disability arts and culture organization that scheduled a series of public performances in Grand Rapids during the Art Prize festival. One of the events was a drag show performed by local actors alongside Drag Syndrome, a group of performers from the U.K. who are living with Down Syndrome. The owner of the performance venue, local business and political figure Peter Meijer, cancelled the drag show performance, questioning whether the performers had the capacity to make their own decisions and stating that persons with disabilities are “special souls” and “should be protected.” DisArt then presented Meijer with assurances that the performers did have the capacity to understand and consent to their performances, but Meijer refused to reconsider his position. In 2019 the ACLU of Michigan filed a complaint on DisArt’s behalf with the Michigan Department of Civil Rights, alleging discrimination on the basis of disability and sex. The complaint remains pending. (ACLU Attorney Jay Kaplan.)

EDUCATION

Special Education in Flint. In 2016 the ACLU of Michigan and the Education Law Center filed a class action lawsuit against the State of Michigan and local school districts over the systemic failure to provide an adequate education for children with disabilities in Flint. In the wake of the Flint water crisis, in which the population of an entire city (including approximately 30,000 children) was exposed to lead, our investigation revealed that the public school system lacked the resources, support and expertise needed to properly screen children for disabilities, to address the educational needs of children who have or are at risk of developing disabilities, and to ensure that students with disabilities are not unfairly disciplined, restrained, or excluded from public education. In 2017 Judge Arthur Tarnow denied the defendants’ motions to dismiss, and the Sixth Circuit rejected the defendants’ attempt to bring an interlocutory appeal. In 2018 the state agreed to settle a portion of the case by funding a first-of-its-kind initiative that will provide every child in Flint access to an independently run, state-of-the-art screening program designed to detect disabilities associated with lead exposure. Following additional discovery and negotiations, in 2020 we settled the remaining claims in the case. The settlement includes at least $9 million from the state to establish a fund for special education services for students impacted by the water crisis, $2 million in additional funding from the county, and a commitment to undertake a comprehensive assessment and modification of Flint-area special education plans and policies over the next year. The settlement was approved by the court in May 2021, and the parties continue to negotiate the parameters, timing, and other criteria for the use of the settlement funds. (D.R. v. Michigan Department of Education; ACLU Attorneys Syeda Davidson, Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio, Kristin Totten, and Dan Korobkin, with investigator Giancarlo Guzman; co-counsel Greg Little, Jessica Levin, Elizabeth Athos, and David Sciarra of the Education Law Center, and Lindsay Heck, Michael Jaoude, and Greg Starner of White & Case.)

Public Funding for Private Schools. For over 50 years, Michigan’s Constitution has strictly prohibited public aid to and taxpayer funding of private and religious schools. However, in 2016 the legislature appropriated $2.5 million to “reimburse” private and parochial schools for complying with legal requirements that apply to all schools in Michigan. In 2017 the ACLU of Michigan formed a coalition with public school administrators, teachers, and parents to file a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of the funding, arguing that the appropriation should be struck down because it violates the state constitutional requirement that reserves public education funding exclusively for public schools. In 2018 Michigan Court of Claims Judge Cynthia Diane Stephens ruled in our favor, declared the statute unconstitutional, and issued a permanent injunction prohibiting the state from funding private schools. But the state appealed, and the Michigan Court of Appeals reversed by a vote of 2-1. We then appealed to the Michigan Supreme Court, which affirmed the Court of Appeals ruling in 2020 by an equally divided vote. The case was then remanded to the Court of Claims for consideration of our additional arguments as to why some or all of the funding is unconstitutional. In February 2022 Judge Stephens entered a final judgment allowing some of the reimbursements but not others. Meanwhile, in September 2021 a new lawsuit was filed in federal court by right-wing groups, challenging the restrictions of Michigan’s Constitution as a violation of the United States Constitution, arguing that the restriction is motivated by anti-religious animus. In January 2022 we led the coalition of public school supporters in filing a friend-of-the-court brief in which we argued that Michigan’s restriction is constitutional because its purpose and effect is to reserve limited public funds for public schools, not to discriminate against religion. In September 2022 Judge Robert Jonker dismissed the federal lawsuit, but without reaching the merits; he ruled that because the suit was brought in the specific context of a dispute over state tax deductions, it should have been brought in state court. (Council of Organizations & Others for Education About Parochial (CAP) v. State of Michigan; Hile v. State of Michigan; ACLU Attorney Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Jeffrey Donahue of White Schneider and Brandon Hubbard, Phillip DeRosier, and Ariana Pellegrino of Dickinson Wright.)

ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE

Safe Water for the People of Flint. After the State of Michigan stripped the residents of Flint of their ability to elect local representatives, state-appointed officials decided to use the Flint River as a water source without adding corrosion controls. As a result, lead leached from the water pipes and poisoned the drinking water, causing untold harm to the people of Flint. The ACLU of Michigan and the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) filed a federal lawsuit against state and city officials seeking a court order requiring them to comply with the Safe Drinking Water Act. The goal of the lawsuit, filed in 2016, was to require the state and the city to replace the lead pipes and, in the meantime, ensure that officials deliver safe drinking water. Judge David Lawson granted our request for door-to-door bottled water delivery and filter installation, and soon after recommended that the parties enter mediation. In 2017 we reached an unprecedented settlement for $97 million requiring the state and city to replace all lead and galvanized pipes throughout Flint, allocate resources for health and wellness programs, continue door-to-door filter installation and education, and extensively monitor Flint's tap water for lead. We continue to monitor compliance and, when necessary, file motions to enforce aspects of the settlement, including the city's agreement to complete excavations and replacements at all remaining homes in Flint by the end of 2022. (Concerned Pastors for Social Action v. Khouri; ACLU Attorneys Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Dimple Chaudhary, Sarah Tallman, Jolie McLaughlin, and Jared Knicley of NRDC, and Glenn Simmington.)

Flint Residents May Sue for Constitutional Violations. Flint residents filed class action lawsuits in both federal and state court for damages caused by the water crisis. In federal court, they brought claims that the malfeasance of government officials violated their rights under the United States Constitution. The district judge dismissed the federal lawsuit, ruling that the residents' constitutional claims were preempted by the federal Safe Drinking Water Act (SDWA). On appeal, the ACLU of Michigan and the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the Sixth Circuit arguing that Congress never intended to strip citizens of the right to seek a remedy under the Constitution when it enacted the SDWA. In 2017 the Sixth Circuit agreed and reinstated the federal damages claims. Meanwhile, in state court, the plaintiffs brought claims arguing that the state violated their right to bodily integrity in violation of the Michigan Constitution by switching the city's water source to the Flint River and deceiving the public about its toxicity. The state sought dismissal of the lawsuit, arguing that there is no constitutional right to bodily integrity, that the state was immune from suit, and that damages were not available for violations of the state constitution. When the case reached the Michigan Supreme Court, we again joined NRDC in filing a friend-of-the-court brief supporting the plaintiffs. In July 2020 the Supreme Court ruled that the plaintiffs' claims could go forward. In 2021 the parties reached a $600 million settlement. (Mays v. Snyder; Mays v. Governor; ACLU Attorneys Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Dimple Chaudhary, Kaitlin Morrison, Sarah Tallman, Jared Knicley, and Jared Orr of NRDC, and Nicholas Leonard of the Great Lakes Environmental Law Center.)

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

Free Speech on Facebook. Charles Blackwell is on a mission to hold public officials accountable. In early 2021 the Inkster Police Department launched an investigation into allegations that the city's parks and recreation director had embezzled public funds. Mr. Blackwell, who has followed Inkster politics for several years, took to Facebook to express his disappointment in the city's handling of the investigation. He posted critical comments about the chief of police on the Inkster Police Department's Facebook page, and exposed the mayor's delinquent property taxes on the mayor's official Facebook page. The police and mayor promptly deleted Mr. Blackwell's critical comments, and blocked him from being able to post, comment, share, or send them direct messages. Mr. Blackwell then filed a federal lawsuit against them to vindicate his First Amendment right to be free from government censorship on city-run

Facebook pages. In June 2021 the ACLU of Michigan joined the case to represent Mr. Blackwell, arguing that when the city intentionally created public spaces on their official Facebook pages where any member of the public could engage in dialogue with city officials and with one another, it created public forums for private speech and is therefore prohibited from censoring or deleting Mr. Blackwell's comments simply because they disagree with his political message. In March 2022 Judge Terrence Berg agreed with our position and denied Inkster's motion to dismiss. In August 2022 the case settled when the city agreed to adopt a First Amendment-friendly social media policy, regularly train all relevant city employees and council members on the policy, and to pay damages and attorneys' fees. (Blackwell v. City of Inkster; ACLU Attorneys Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorney Bill Burdett.)

Free Speech on TikTok. Amanda Caravallah is a TikTok influencer who is outraged by the Supreme Court's decision overruling Roe v. Wade. To document her dissent, she created yard signs with provocative language which she placed on her front lawn in Livonia, and filmed herself on TikTok dancing in front of her house in a swimsuit as an assertion of control over her own body. Several neighbors, including a Wayne County family court judge, took umbrage at Ms. Caravallah's protests and called the police. One of the neighbors then sought, and was able to obtain, a personal protection order (PPO) from another judge on the Wayne County family court. The order was issued "ex parte"—without a hearing allowing Ms. Caravallah to be heard or present evidence—and it prohibiting her from appearing "in sight" of her neighbor, essentially placing her under house arrest, given that the neighbor lives across the street. In July 2022 the ACLU of Michigan filed a motion to terminate the PPO, explaining that Ms. Caravallah's activities were fully protected by the First Amendment. Because one of the neighbors involved in the matter was a Wayne County judge, the case was transferred to Oakland County Circuit Court. After holding three hearings in the matter, in September 2022 Judge Kameshia Gant agreed with our arguments and terminated the PPO. (Gordon v. Caravallah, ACLU Attorneys Phil Mayor and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorneys Allison Kriger and Mark Kriger.)

Freedom of Press Threatened by Project Veritas. Jesse Hicks is a freelance investigative reporter based in Royal Oak who has published in The New Republic, Politico, and other national publications. During the November 2020 election, he reported on efforts by the right-wing smear group Project Veritas to undermine free and fair elections in Texas. In response, Project Veritas filed a petition in Texas state court asking for an order allowing them to take Hicks's deposition in Michigan and require him to identify his anonymous sources and other reporting methods. The ACLU of Michigan represented Hicks to protect his First Amendment right to report on threats to our democracy. In October 2021 we filed a motion to dismiss Project Veritas's petition. In December 2021 the court granted our motion, and Project Veritas took no further action in the case. (Project Veritas v. Hicks; ACLU Attorney Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorneys Daniel Quick of Dickinson Wright, and Jim Hemphill.)

Racial Justice Protests in Chelsea. In the summer of 2020 a group of high school students formed a group called Anti-Racist Chelsea Youth and held a non-disruptive march in downtown Chelsea to support the Black Lives Matter movement. The Chelsea police, rather than directing traffic and allowing the students to march, ticketed them for impeding traffic. In November 2020 the ACLU of Michigan joined the University of Michigan's civil rights clinic in defending the youth in state court, filing a motion to dismiss the citations on grounds that the impeding-traffic statute violates the First Amendment because it makes exceptions for charitable solicitations but not political protests. In March 2021 Judge Anna Frushour agreed and dismissed all citations. The city did not appeal. (City of Chelsea v. King; ACLU Attorney Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorneys John Shea, David Blanchard, John Minock, Paul Reingold, and Delphia Simpson; co-counsel Michael J. Steinberg of U-M Law School, with student attorneys Diane Kee, Laila Kassis, and Jeremy Shur.)

Detroit Police Countersue Protesters. In the wake of the murders of George Floyd and Breonna Taylor, demonstrators took to the streets of Detroit in the summer of 2020 to protest police violence and systemic racism. Although the protesters were largely peaceful, police officers responded with mass arrests and violence, deploying tear gas, pepper spray and rubber bullets; in some instances they physically beat protesters or battered them with their police vehicles. Detroit Will Breathe, an organization central to the protests, filed a federal civil rights lawsuit against the police, alleging an excessive use of force and unlawful arrests. The City of Detroit then filed a counterclaim, seeking to hold Detroit Will Breathe and its organizers personally liable for property damage and injuries to police officers that were allegedly perpetrated by different protesters. The ACLU filed a friend-of-the-court brief arguing that the counterclaim should be dismissed, as it was barred by well-established First Amendment principles holding that protesters cannot be held liable for the actions of others unless they have directly and immediately instigated those actions. Our brief explained that the city's litigation tactics were reminiscent of those used by cities in the Deep South that resisted desegregation and abused protesters during the Civil Rights Movement. In March 2021 the court granted Detroit Will Breathe's motion and dismissed the city's counterclaim. (Detroit Will Breathe v. City of Detroit; ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Phil Mayor and Dan Korobkin; National ACLU Attorneys Vera Edelman and Brian Hauss.)

Lawyer's Right to Hold Press Conference. Law enforcement officers from a task force that included federal and state officers entered the Detroit home of 20-year-old Terrance Kellom to arrest him. By the end of the encounter, Kellom had been shot ten times by an ICE officer who had a record of violence. Civil rights lawyer Nabih Ayad filed a federal lawsuit on behalf of Kellom's survivors, and as part of his advocacy he conducted a press conference to share damning evidence of police misconduct with the public. The court sanctioned Ayad for speaking to the press about materials produced in discovery because they were allegedly subject to a court order that protected the documents from public disclosure. However, the documents could not be considered secret because they had already been filed on the court's docket by the defendant officer's own attorney and were freely available to the public. In 2020 the ACLU of Michigan, along with the Detroit Branch of the NAACP and the Arab American Civil Rights League (ACRL), filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals on behalf of Ayad, arguing that longstanding principles of common law and First Amendment jurisprudence protected attorneys' public comment on publicly filed discovery materials. In September 2021 the Sixth Circuit vacated the sanctions order and remanded the case for additional factfinding regarding the documents that had been disclosed. (Kellom v. United States; ACLU Attorneys Mark P. Fancher and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Chui Karega of the Detroit NAACP and Rula Aoun of ACRL.)

Synagogue Protesters. For over 15 years, a small group of anti-Israel activists have been protesting in front of a synagogue in Ann Arbor. Although the protests are peaceful and quiet, and the participants stay on a public sidewalk, they are very controversial and are viewed by many as anti-Semitic. In 2019 a member of the synagogue filed a federal lawsuit against the protesters, seeking a court-ordered injunction to stop the protests and damages for emotional distress. In March 2020 the ACLU of Michigan filed a friend-of-the-court brief condemning the protesters' speech and tactics but arguing that the speech is nonetheless protected by the First Amendment. We pointed out that if the lawsuit against these protesters is allowed to proceed, activists who peacefully protest on public sidewalks about a wide range of issues, including abortion rights, animal welfare, and the environment, could be targets of litigation, which would have an overall chilling effect on speech and political activity for ordinary citizens. In August 2020 Judge Victoria Roberts dismissed the lawsuit. The plaintiffs appealed, and we filed our friend-of-the-court brief in the Sixth Circuit. In September 2021 the Sixth Circuit affirmed, agreeing with our position that the protests are protected by the First Amendment. (Gerber v. Herskovitz; ACLU of Michigan Attorney Dan Korobkin; National ACLU Attorneys Brian Hauss, Ben Wizner, Dan Mach, and David Cole.)

FREEDOM OF RELIGION

County Threatens to Demolish Amish Homes. When a community of “old order” Amish families moved to a rural area of Lenawee County, many from neighboring communities where they had lived in peace for generations, county officials insisted that they must use running water and modern sewage systems that conflict with the order’s religious practice of rejecting the use of modern technology. Despite efforts to educate local officials about the religious practices of the Amish, the county posted notices on Amish homes calling them “unfit for human habitation.” In October 2019 Lenawee County filed lawsuits against every Amish family in the county asking a court to kick the Amish off their own property and demolish their homes. The ACLU of Michigan is representing the Amish families to defend their right to adhere to their religious beliefs while not harming anyone else. In December 2019 we filed counterclaims for violating the Amish families’ constitutional rights to religious liberty as well as federal law. The case remains pending. (Lenawee County Health Department v. Eicher; ACLU Attorneys Phil Mayor, Ramis Wadood, and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorney John Shea; co-counsel Rick Schulte, Steve Behnke, Dennis Mulvihill, and Jacob Bender.)

Religious Prisoners Deprived of Halal and Kosher Food. In 2013 the ACLU of Michigan won a class action lawsuit against the Michigan Department of Corrections (MDOC) on behalf of Muslim prisoners whose meals did not comply with the halal requirements of Islam. Soon after this important religious freedom victory for Muslim prisoners, we learned that MDOC had stopped ordering pre-packaged kosher meals for Jewish prisoners. Instead, it adopted a “one size fits all” vegan diet that it claimed met the religious requirements of all religions. However, the vegan food was prepared in the same kitchen as non-kosher food and is served using the same utensils that are used for non-kosher food, which violates kosher laws against cross-contamination. In 2016 the ACLU of Michigan and the MSU Civil Rights Clinic agreed to represent a Jewish prisoner who was challenging the denial of a kosher diet as a violation of his religious freedom. In 2018 Judge Linda Parker denied MDOC’s motion to dismiss, and in January 2020 approved a settlement agreement in which MDOC is required to provide certified kosher meals to Jewish prisoners who request them. Additional disputes have arisen regarding MDOC’s compliance with the settlement agreement, but in March 2021 the court denied further relief. (Dowdy-El v. Caruso; Ackerman v. Washington; ACLU Attorney Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorney Daniel Quick of Dickinson Wright; co-counsel Daniel Manville of the MSU Civil Rights Clinic.)

Religious Probation Program. In January 2022 the ACLU of Michigan learned that the Wayne County Prosecutor’s Office was developing a new program called the “Faith Project.” The program would have allowed some people accused of crimes to receive deferred sentences in exchange for agreeing to be supervised by a religious leader who would be assigned to them by the prosecutor’s office. If the religious leader determined that the individual was non-compliant, the individual could be sent to jail or prison. All but one of the religious leaders who were listed as participating in the program led Protestant Christian churches, and no alternative was offered to participate in a secular program. In February 2022 we sent a letter to Wayne County Prosecutor Kym Worthy warning her that the program would violate the Establishment Clause of the United States Constitution because it allowed individuals to avoid incarceration by entering into a program supervised by religious authorities while providing no comparable non-religious alternative, and because it provided religious authorities with unconstrained discretion to determine whether an individual was compliant with their programming. In response to our letter, the prosecutor’s office put its development of the program on hold. (ACLU Attorneys Phil Mayor, Ramis Wadood, and Dan Korobkin.)

Religious Rights of Indigenous People. In February 2022 the Detroit Police Department sent 14 armed officers to Rouge Park to shut down a religious ceremony known as the Detroit Sugarbush that commemorates the harvesting and processing of maple syrup and sugar. The activity is considered a sacred rite in various indigenous communities and had been conducted for several years without controversy. The police officers on the scene, purportedly responding to concerns about whether an open fire was authorized, were unwilling to discuss whether the participants had the right to be there. In consultation with Sugarbush organizers, the ACLU of Michigan sent a letter to Detroit’s chief of police explaining that under federal and state constitutions and statutes, the Sugarbush ceremony should be accommodated as a legally protected religious practice. We also urged the police department to arrange for its officers to participate in restorative practices with the Sugarbush participants and undergo training. The chief responded by expressing a willingness to engage with the Sugarbush participants. (ACLU Attorneys Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio and Mark P. Fancher.)

IMMIGRANTS’ RIGHTS

Vulnerable Immigrants Freed from Jail During the COVID-19 Crisis. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) warehouses many immigrants in Michigan jails while seeking to deport them from the country. During a pandemic, this practice is not just inhumane, it can be deadly, particularly for people who are older or have medical vulnerabilities. People in jails are crowded together in unsanitary conditions with no ability to socially distance or protect themselves from the virus, and medical care in jails is notoriously inadequate for people with chronic conditions. In 2020 the ACLU sued ICE, arguing that keeping immigrants with vulnerabilities locked up during the pandemic violates their constitutional right to safe conditions of confinement. Judge Judith Levy agreed, certified a class of immigration detainees held at the Calhoun County Jail, and adopted a bail application process to decide whether vulnerable class members should remain locked up there. Over 50 medically frail people were freed through the case. In addition, under pressure from the litigation, ICE and the Calhoun County Jail made significant improvements in conditions, including providing personal protective equipment and offering vaccines. However, in February 2021 a class member died in the jail after his repeated pleas for medical attention were ignored. Although the death was not caused by COVID-19, the records we reviewed revealed that his tragic death was likely preventable had he been provided with proper medical attention. Along with coalition partners we have called for an independent inquiry into medical care at the Calhoun County Jail, and for Calhoun County and ICE to end immigration detention there once and for all. The case against ICE is in settlement negotiations. (Malam v. Adducci; ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Miriam Aukerman, Dan Korobkin, Monica Andrade, Syeda Davidson, Elaine Lewis, Rohit Rajan, and Ramis Wadood; additional attorneys include Anand Balakrishnan, My Khanh Ngo, Eunice Cho, and Michael Tan of the National ACLU and Jeannie Rhee, Mark Mendelson, and associates and counsel from Paul Weiss.)

U.S. Citizen Turned Over to ICE for Deportation. We are representing Jilmar Ramos-Gomez, a United States citizen and Marine Corps veteran who was wrongfully turned over to Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) for deportation proceedings. Mr. Ramos-Gomez, who suffers from PTSD as a result of his military service in Afghanistan, was arrested by the Grand Rapids police in 2018 after trespassing at a local hospital. An off-duty police captain named Curt VanderKooi saw Mr. Ramos-Gomez's picture on the news and asked ICE to check his "status," despite having no reason to think he was undocumented other than his name and Latino appearance. ICE then issued an immigration detainer request for Mr. Ramos-Gomez, resulting in the Kent County Jail placing him in federal custody until his family could prove he was a U.S. citizen and get him released. An ACLU of Michigan investigation revealed that VanderKooi, who is supposed to have no role in immigration enforcement, has contacted ICE on over 80 occasions, each time asking them to check the immigration status of a person of color. In 2019 VanderKooi was suspended without pay, the Grand Rapids police announced a new policy that prohibits officers from inquiring about a person's immigration status or contacting ICE for civil immigration enforcement, and the City of Grand Rapids settled Mr. Ramos-Gomez's claim for $190,000. Similarly, Kent County adopted a new policy requiring a judicial warrant before turning someone over to ICE. ICE, however, refused to accept responsibility, and we filed suit to hold the officers involved accountable. Judge Robert Jonker dismissed that lawsuit in January 2022 on various grounds, including qualified immunity. In May 2022 we filed a second lawsuit against the United States under the Federal Tort Claims Act seeking damages for Mr. Ramos-Gomez. (Ramos-Gomez v. Adducci; ACLU of Michigan v. Department of Homeland Security; Ramos-Gomez v. United States; ACLU Attorneys Miriam Aukerman, Dan Korobkin, Monica Andrade, Elaine Lewis, and Ramis Wadood; Cooperating Attorneys Anand Swaminathan, Joshua Burday, Merrick Wayne, Megan Pierce, and Matthew Topic of Loevy & Loevy; additional attorneys include Julia Kelly, Richard Kessler, and Hillary Scholten.)

Iraqis Face Torture or Death if Deported. In 2017 hundreds of Iraqis in Michigan and throughout the country were arrested by Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), which intended to deport them immediately to Iraq. Most have been living in the United States for decades, but were previously ordered deported, either for technical immigration violations or for past convictions. Because the Iraqi government had long refused to issue travel documents for potential deportees, the United States has been unable to deport them. But when Iraq agreed to accept some U.S. deportees, suddenly all 1400 Iraqis with an old deportation order were targets.

The ACLU filed a class action lawsuit in federal court to stop the deportations on the grounds that they would likely result in persecution, torture or death for those deported. In 2017 Judge Mark Goldsmith issued a preliminary injunction barring deportation of Iraqis while they access the immigration court system, giving them time to file motions to reopen their immigration cases based on the changed country conditions or legal developments in the decades since their cases were decided. Subsequent orders in 2018 required the government to provide Iraqis with bond hearings and release those who had been detained longer than six months, freeing hundreds of people from detention. But the government appealed, and in decisions in December 2018 and January 2020 the Sixth Circuit reversed, each time by a vote of 2-1. Despite the legal setbacks in the Sixth Circuit, the case has allowed hundreds of Iraqis to access the immigration court system, as well as to fight their immigration case from home, rather than in detention. Many are winning their immigration cases, and some have even become citizens. But a few have been deported, and one of our clients, Jimmy Al Dauod, died in Iraq. The case is in settlement negotiations. (Hamama v. Adducci; ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Miriam Aukerman, Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio, Dan Korobkin, Monica Andrade, and Elaine Lewis; additional attorneys include Lee Gelernt, Judy Rabinowitz, and Anand Balakrishnan of the National ACLU; ACLU of Michigan Cooperating Attorneys Margo Schlanger of U-M Law School, Kimberly Scott, Wendy Richards, Andrew Blum, Erika Giroux, and Russel Bucher of Miller Canfield, with support from James Angyan and Katie Witowski; David Johnson, Linda Goldberg, and William Swor; and co-counsel Nadine Yousif and Nora Youkhana of CODE Legal Aid; Susan Reed and Ruby Robinson of the Michigan Immigrant Rights Center; and Mariko Hirose of the International Refugee Assistance Project.)

Donald Trump’s Muslim Ban. When campaigning for president, Donald Trump called for a ban on Muslims entering the United States. In January 2017, one week after his inauguration, President Trump banned travel for immigrants from seven Muslim-majority countries and halted the refugee resettlement program. His executive order was almost immediately halted by federal courts in lawsuits filed across the country, including by Judge Victoria Roberts in Detroit who enjoined portions of the executive order that prevented lawful permanent residents from the barred countries from returning to the United States. The ACLU of Michigan joined with the Arab American Civil Rights League (ACRL) in challenging the order in the Detroit case. In 2018 the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the lower courts erred in granting a preliminary injunction against the ban because they applied the wrong legal standard, but in July 2019 Judge Roberts ruled that our case can proceed under the standard the Supreme Court set. In November 2019 the government sought and obtained permission to appeal to the Sixth Circuit. After President Biden took office, he rescinded the Muslim Ban, and in February 2021 the case was dismissed as moot. (Arab American Civil Rights League v. Trump; ACLU Attorneys Miriam Aukerman, Dan Korobkin, Monica Andrade, Elaine Lewis, and Rohit Rajan; Cooperating Attorneys Jason Raofield, Nishchay Maskay, and Alyson Sandler of Covington & Burling, Julian Mortenson of Miller Canfield, and Margo Schlanger and Samuel Bagenstos of U-M Law School; co-counsel Nabih Ayad, Rula Aoun, Kassem Dakhllallah, Mona Fadlallah, Ali Hammoud, and Natalie Qandah.)

Is All of Michigan a Warrantless Border Zone? Customs and Border Protection (CBP), the parent agency of Border Patrol, claims authority under a federal statute to conduct warrantless searches within a “reasonable distance” of the border. Its outdated regulations define “reasonable distance” to be “100 air miles” from any external boundary, including coastal boundaries, unless an agency official sets a shorter distance. In Michigan, the agency considers the entire state of Michigan as falling within the 100-mile zone. The ACLU of Michigan and coalition partners filed a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request for more information about these warrantless searches, but CBP failed to respond, so in 2016 we sued in federal court to obtain the records. Although CBP provided some information in response to our lawsuit, it redacted all geographic information from the records, making it impossible to determine where in Michigan CBP is operating and how far from the actual border the agency is conducting warrantless searches. In 2018 we reached a settlement agreement that required CBP to provide city/township-level geographic information, and in 2020 we finally received the last of the documents. Our analysis of those records showed disturbing patterns of racial profiling and abuse, as well as extensive and damaging entanglement between local law enforcement and CBP. In March 2021 we published our findings in a report entitled The Border's Long Shadow: How Border Patrol Uses Racial Profiling and Local and State Police to Instill Fear in Michigan's Immigrant Communities, a first-of-its-kind investigation of CBP's Michigan operations. Following the release of our report, the Michigan State Police, who were responsible for initiating the detention of the most people who are transferred into CBP custody, adopted policy changes to better safeguard against violations of immigrants' rights, and members of Congress have asked the Department of Homeland Security for briefing and information regarding the report's findings. Legal Hotline for Immigrant Victims of Police Misconduct. After years of racist rhetoric, anti-immigrant policies and over-policing, immigrants often fall victim to abuse, discrimination, and other forms of misconduct at the hands of police officers and immigration agents. To address this problem and promote accountability, in May 2022 the ACLU of Michigan launched a project dedicated to representing immigrant victims of police mistreatment in seeking relief for abuse and harassment they have faced. As a part of this project, we have set up the Immigrant Police Misconduct Hotline (313-208-7048) that is available to anyone in Michigan who wants to report instances of police violence, discrimination, or surveillance on the basis of their immigration status to the ACLU in a confidential manner. (ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Ramis Wadood, Monica Andrade, and Phil Mayor.)

Immigrant Justice Partnership. When President Trump was elected, he unleashed a deportation force, terrorizing immigrant communities and ripping families apart. In 2017 the ACLU and the Michigan Immigrant Rights Center (MIRC) created the Immigrant Justice Partnership (IJP) to document these abuses, identify systemic problems, and hold the government accountable. IJP has trained lawyers to assist immigrants who have been arrested, offered "know your rights" trainings to affected communities, and promoted city policies that welcome immigrants. In 2019 we provided extensive recommendations to the Michigan State Police (MSP) about policy changes to ensure impartial policing and prevent entanglement between the MSP and federal immigration authorities, which resulted in policy changes issued in 2021. In recent years we have worked together on issues regarding the heightened dangers of immigration detention during the COVID-19 pandemic, as well as developing resource materials to help immigrants seek relief from detention or deportation under new enforcement priorities adopted by the Biden administration. Wadood; MIRC Attorneys Susan Reed, Ruby Robinson, Anna Hill, Eva Alvarez, and Ana Devereaux.)

LGBTQ RIGHTS

Discrimination by Foster Care and Adoption Agencies. In 2017 the ACLU filed a federal lawsuit challenging Michigan’s practice of permitting state-funded child placement agencies to reject qualified same-sex couples based on the agencies’ religious beliefs. The State of Michigan is responsible for approximately 13,000 children who are in the state’s foster care system, usually because they were removed from their families due to abuse or neglect. Even though adoption and foster care placement is a public function, the state allowed publicly funded agencies, some of which are faith-based, to discriminate against same-sex couples. In 2018 Judge Paul Borman denied the state’s motion to dismiss our lawsuit. In February 2019 the case settled when Governor Whitmer’s new administration agreed to a non-discrimination policy for all contracts with adoption and foster care agencies. However, in March 2019 two faith-based agencies filed new lawsuits against the state, claiming that the non-discrimination policies violated their right to religious liberty. Judge Robert Jonker granted a preliminary injunction in one of the cases, preventing the state from enforcing its non-discrimination policy pending further review. We filed motions to intervene in the new cases in order to defend the settlement agreement from our previous case. Judge Jonker denied our motion to intervene in one of the cases, but the Sixth Circuit reversed. However, in 2021 the U.S. Supreme Court decided a similar case in favor of faith-based agencies, significantly changing the law in this area. Following that ruling, in January 2022 Michigan entered into a consent judgment that will allow the faith-based agencies to refuse to work with same-sex couples under some circumstances, and in May 2022 we withdrew from the case. (Dumont v. Lyon; Buck v. Gordon; Catholic Charities West Michigan v. Michigan Department of Health & Human Services; ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Jay Kaplan and Dan Korobkin; National ACLU Attorneys Leslie Cooper and Dan Mach; co-counsel Garrard Beeney, Ann-Elizabeth Ostrager and Elizabeth Storey of Sullivan & Cromwell.)

Protection for LGBTQ People Under Michigan Civil Rights Law. In 2019 the Michigan Department of Civil Rights (MDCR) began investigating two companies that refused to provide their services to LGBTQ people. The companies sued MDCR in state court, arguing that Michigan’s Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act (ELCRA) prohibits discrimination based on sex but not based on sexual orientation or gender identity. The Michigan Court of Claims ruled that ELCRA does prohibit discrimination based on gender identity, but that it was bound by a 1993 Michigan Court of Appeals decision to rule that ELCRA does not prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation. On appeal, the ACLU of Michigan, joined by national and state LGBTQ organizations, filed a friend-of-the-court brief with the Michigan Supreme Court, urging the court to bypass the Court of Appeals and take up the case immediately to overrule the 1993 decision and hold that discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity are both forms of discrimination based on sex prohibited by ELCRA. The Supreme Court granted the request and allowed the ACLU to participate in oral argument in March 2022. In July 2022 the Court ruled that discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation is sex discrimination in violation of ELCRA. As a result of this decision, LGBTQ people in Michigan have some of the most comprehensive civil rights protections in the country against discrimination in employment, housing, education and public services and accommodations. (Rouch World LLC v. Department of Civil Rights; ACLU Attorneys Jay Kaplan and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorneys Leah Litman and Daniel Deacon of U-M Law School.)

Protection for Transgender People Under Hate Crimes Statute. Michigan has a statute that enhances punishment for assaults that are motivated by race, religion, national origin, or gender. Although the ACLU generally opposes statutes that enhance punishments, there are many civil rights laws that prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex or gender and the ACLU believes that they should be interpreted as protecting LGBTQ people from discrimination. In 2018 a woman named Kimora Steuball was shot and seriously injured by a man who was harassing her for being transgender. The assailant was prosecuted under Michigan’s hate crimes law, but the Michigan Court of Appeals ruled that the law does not cover crimes motivated by animus against transgender people. Such a decision would likely affect whether people who are fired from their jobs or denied services in stores and restaurants based on their gender identity will be protected by any of Michigan’s civil rights laws. In 2020 the ACLU filed a friend-of-the-court brief asking the Michigan Supreme Court to take the case and rule that assaulting someone because they are transgender is an assault motivated by gender in violation of state law. The Supreme Court ordered the Court of Appeals to reconsider its decision, and in August 2021 the Court of Appeals reversed itself, agreeing with our position and holding that violence motivated by a person’s gender identity is an assault based on that person’s gender and therefore violates Michigan’s hate crimes statute. (People v. Rogers; National ACLU Attorney John Knight and Liman Fellow Joshua Blecher-Cohen; ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Jay Kaplan and Dan Korobkin.)

LGBTQ Parents Cut Off From Their Children. Carrie Pueblo and her same-sex partner, Rachel Haas, decided to have a child together by artificial insemination, with Ms. Haas serving as the parent who would carry the child. At the time, Michigan law made it illegal for the couple to marry. The child, born in 2008, was raised by both mothers, but after the parents’ relationship fell apart, Ms. Haas denied Ms. Pueblo all contact with their child. Ms. Pueblo filed suit in family court seeking shared custody and parenting time, but both the trial court and Michigan Court of Appeals held that because she is not the child’s biological mother, she did not have standing. In May 2022 the ACLU of Michigan led a coalition of organizations in filing a friend-of-the-court brief urging the Michigan Supreme Court to hear the case, arguing that parents who were unconstitutionally denied the right to marry should be able to invoke a judicial doctrine known as “equitable parenthood” to seek custody and parenting time, and that when a same-sex couple uses assisted reproduction, legal parentage can be established for the non-birth parent under Michigan’s assisted reproduction statute. In September 2022 the Michigan Supreme Court announced that it would take the case. (Pueblo v. Haas; ACLU Attorneys Miriam Aukerman, Jay Kaplan, and Dan Korobkin.)

Assisted Reproductive Technology. For many lesbian couples, assisted reproductive technology allows one mom to be the genetic parent and the other mom to carry and give birth to the child. Kyresha LeFever and Laneshia Matthews were one such couple. However, when the couple split up and their custody case went to court, a trial judge in Wayne County ruled that Ms. Matthews, the carrying/birth mom, was not a legal parent and had no rights to custody or parenting time. The ACLU filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the Michigan Court of Appeals in support of Ms. Matthews, arguing that both mothers are natural parents with equal legal rights. In April 2021 the Court of Appeals issued a decision agreeing with our position, reversed the trial court’s decision, and remanded for a new custody hearing in which both mothers must be considered parents. (LeFever v. Matthews; ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Jay Kaplan and Dan Korobkin; National ACLU Attorneys Taylor Brown and Leslie Cooper.)

Voir Dire on LGBT Bias. Before potential jurors can be selected for a trial, a question-and-answer process known as “voir dire” is used to test whether they can be impartial, unbiased, and don’t have any conflicts of interest. In Wayne County, Jeffrey Six was put on trial for criminal financial fraud. As part of his defense he alleged that his former domestic partner, a man, was the one who actually engaged in the fraudulent transaction. Because this defense would require jurors to learn that he is gay, his attorneys requested that the jury voir dire include an inquiry into the jurors’ attitudes regarding gay relationships. The judge denied the request and Mr. Six was convicted. In 2018 the ACLU of Michigan joined Lambda Legal in filing a friend-of-the-court brief in the Michigan Court of Appeals arguing that the right to a fair trial and an impartial jury requires voir dire regarding anti-gay bias when the fact of an LGBT relationship is inextricably bound up with the issues to be decided at trial. In 2020 the Court of Appeals remanded the case back to the trial court for an explanation as to why the voir dire was not allowed. Following proceedings on remand, in 2021 we submitted an additional friend-of-the-court brief reaffirming our support of allowing voir dire to include inquiries regarding anti-gay bias. In April 2022, however, the Court of Appeals issued a 2-1 decision affirming the judge’s denial of the voir dire request. Mr. Six did not appeal. (People v. Six; ACLU Attorney Jay Kaplan; co-counsel Ethan Rice, Richard Saenz, and Max Isaacs of Lambda Legal.)

Insurance Coverage for Medically Necessary Health Care. Michigan’s Medicaid program contracts with private insurance companies to provide government-funded Medicaid services, and some companies have long resisted transgender patients’ efforts to obtain coverage for gender dysphoria-related treatments even when their medical providers have determined the treatments to be medically necessary. Beginning in 2018 the ACLU of Michigan represented transgender women in multiple administrative appeals challenging denials of coverage for gender confirmation surgery. Following our advocacy efforts, in September 2018 the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services (MDHHS) instructed Michigan Medicaid insurance programs to remove blanket exclusions of gender confirmation surgery from their policies, citing the nondiscrimination requirements of the Affordable Care Act, and our clients’ administrative claims settled. Since then we have continued to represent transgender women in administrative appeals challenging the denial of coverage for facial feminization surgeries. The Michigan Department of Insurance and Financial Services (DIFS), Michigan’s insurance regulatory agency, has resolved the vast majority of these appeals in favor of the patients, holding that insurance companies must apply the standard of care established by the World Professional Association for Transgender Health (WPATH), and under those standards facial feminization surgery was medically necessary for treatment of gender dysphoria. In April 2021 we appealed a contrary DIFS decision involving Molina Healthcare to the Ingham County Circuit Court, and the case quickly settled. In November 2021, following continuing advocacy efforts, MDHHS issued an official policy directive requiring Medicaid providers to use WPATH standards to determine coverage for gender-confirming treatments and procedures. Despite this directive in September 2022 we were forced to appeal an adverse DIFS ruling involving Blue Cross Blue Shield. (Hudson v. Molina Healthcare of Michigan; Wismer v. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan; ACLU Attorneys Jay Kaplan and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorney Gerald Aben of Dykema.)

Sperm Donor Sued by State for Child Support. Many LGBTQ families rely upon artificial reproductive technology to have children, including artificial insemination as a result of sperm donation. In some cases, sperm donations are provided anonymously at sperm banks, and these donations are used in expensive procedures that financially well-off couples can afford. But when a lesbian couple knows their sperm donor and the artificial insemination process takes place at home, even without sexual intercourse, the policy of the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services (MDHHS) is to treat that sperm donor as an “absentee father” who may owe child support if the biological mother ever applies for or receives public assistance. In June 2021 the ACLU of Michigan was contacted by a mother who had fallen on hard times and applied for public assistance for herself and her eight-year-old child. Because the mother acknowledged that she knew the identity of the sperm donor who helped her conceive, her case was referred to the Wayne County Prosecutor’s Office, which then filed a lawsuit against the sperm donor, in the mother’s name, to collect child support payments. In October 2021 we wrote letters to the prosecutor and MDHHS urging them to dismiss the child support action and for MDHHS to change its policy regarding sperm donors. In response, the prosecutor dismissed the child support action in May 2022. MDHHS paused its current policy and is working to revise it. (ACLU Attorney Jay Kaplan.)

Surgery Requirement to Correct Birth Certificate. Appropriate treatment for gender dysphoria includes obtaining accurate identity documents that reflect a transgender person’s authentic life. A Michigan statute, however, prohibits transgender people from changing the gender on their birth certificate unless they undergo sex reassignment surgery. This prevented transgender persons born in Michigan from correcting their birth certificates if they are unable to undergo surgery for medical or financial reasons, or simply do not want it. In February 2021 the Director of the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services (MDHHS) requested an opinion from Attorney General Dana Nessel as to the constitutionality of the surgery requirement in Michigan’s birth certificate law. In March 2021 we submitted a letter, joined by Michigan LGBTQ organizations, urging the Attorney General to find that the surgery requirement was unconstitutional. The letter explained that the statute violated the right to equal protection under the law, the due process right to privacy, the due process right to refuse medical treatment, and the right to freedom of expression. In July 2021 the Attorney General issued an opinion agreeing with our position and declaring that the gender reassignment surgery requirement to correct a birth certificate violated both the equal protection and privacy rights of transgender people born in Michigan. In response, MDHHS immediately stopped enforcing the requirement. (ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Jay Kaplan and Dan Korobkin; National ACLU Attorney John Knight.)

Stuck on the No Fly List. Ahmed Chebli is a United States citizen of Lebanese descent and father of two young children who lives in Dearborn. In 2018 FBI agents approached him, suggested that he knew people who were involved in terrorist activity, and demanded that he become a government informant against people in his community. Mr. Chebli had no such knowledge and refused to cooperate. He and his family were then placed on the TSA’s infamous “No Fly” list, and his exhaustive efforts to get off the list or even find out why he is on it were unsuccessful. In April 2021 the ACLU filed a lawsuit on Mr. Chebli’s behalf. Just ten days after we filed the lawsuit, the government removed Mr. Chebli from the list and admitted that there is no basis for him to be on the list. In May 2021 we voluntarily dismissed the lawsuit as moot. (Chebli v. Kable; National ACLU Attorneys Hina Shamsi, Sana Mayat, and Hugh Handeyside; ACLU of Michigan Attorney Dan Korobkin.)

Secret Video of Prisoner's Death. In 2016 a Michigan prisoner named Dustin Szot died under suspicious circumstances. He was allegedly involved in an altercation with another prisoner, and prison guards shocked him with a taser. Spencer Woodman, an independent journalist who reports nationally on criminal justice issues, learned that the entire incident was captured on video and requested a copy of the footage under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). The Michigan Department of Corrections (MDOC) refused to release the video, claiming that its disclosure would somehow undermine prison security. In 2017 the ACLU of Michigan filed a lawsuit on Woodman's behalf, arguing that the state had no legitimate justification for keeping the video secret. During discovery, we learned that the MDOC staff has a policy of automatically denying all FOIA requests for videos, without even viewing the video in question to determine whether or how its disclosure would threaten security. In 2019 Michigan Court of Claims Judge Cynthia Diane Stephens ruled that MDOC's policy was illegal and ordered the state to turn over the video footage. However, the court then slashed the ACLU cooperating attorneys' fees by 90% because the work was being done pro bono, and we appealed. In 2021 the Court of Appeals ruled that we had only partially prevailed in the lawsuit. We filed an application for leave to appeal with the Michigan Supreme Court, and in April 2022 the Court announced that it will hear arguments in our case. (Woodman v. Michigan Department of Corrections; ACLU Attorney Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorneys Robert Riley, Marie Greenman, Olivia Vizachero, and Rian Dawson of Honigman.)

Access to Records About Immigration Detention. In 2019 the ACLU of Michigan brought a lawsuit under the Michigan Freedom of Information Act after Calhoun County refused to respond to a request for records about the detention of Jilmar Ramos-Gomez, a U.S. citizen who was held illegally in immigration detention at the Calhoun County Jail. The trial court dismissed the case based on an obscure federal regulation that the county said prohibited the public from seeing all local records about people held for ICE. The Michigan Court of Appeals affirmed in a ruling that would have made it almost impossible to obtain information about immigration detention in Michigan. In February 2022 a unanimous Michigan Supreme Court reversed, holding that immigration detention records are not exempt from disclosure under Michigan's Freedom of Information Act. The case is now back in the trial court for further proceedings. (ACLU of Michigan v. Calhoun County; ACLU Attorneys Miriam Aukerman, Dan Korobkin, Monica Andrade, and Elaine Lewis; Cooperating Attorneys Merrick Wayne, Joshua Burday, and Matthew Topic of Loevy & Loevy.)

Police Department's Use-of-Force Policies. After George Floyd was killed by police, Amy Hjerstedt, on behalf of the Eastern Upper Peninsula League of Women Voters, requested a copy of the local police department's use-of-force policy to see if improvements could be made. The City of Sault Ste. Marie refused to disclose the full policy, redacting major portions. Ms. Hjerstedt filed suit under Michigan's Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) to get an unredacted copy. Even though many police departments post their use-of-force policies online, the trial court agreed with the city's claim that the reacted sections could be withheld. In August 2022 the ACLU of Michigan filed a friend-of-the-court brief in Ms. Hjerstedt's appeal to the Court of Appeals, arguing that public access to use-of-force policies is critical to robust debate about policing, and that FOIA was intended to make precisely this type of information available. (Hjerstedt v. City of Sault St. Marie; ACLU Attorneys Miriam Aukerman, Mark P. Fancher, and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorneys Stephen van Stempvoort, Alise Hildreth, and Joslin Monahan from Miller Johnson.)

POVERTY

State Constitutional Violations by Unemployment Agency. Michigan's Unemployment Insurance Agency relied on a flawed computer program to falsely accuse thousands of citizens of insurance fraud and wrongfully eliminate their unemployment benefits, all the while providing little recourse for them to challenge these determinations and sending some into bankruptcy and financial ruin. A group of affected citizens sued the state for violating their rights under the Michigan Constitution, but the state argued that there is no remedy in state court for this violation. In fact, it has long been an unsettled question whether Michigan law allows the recovery of damages from governmental officials who violate their rights under our state constitution. As our federal courts become more conservative in their interpretation of the United States Constitution, it is increasingly important that we look to vindicate constitutional rights in state court. In 2021 the ACLU of Michigan, along with the National Lawyers Guild, filed a friend-of-the-court brief urging the Michigan Supreme Court to once and for all hold that in almost all cases, people whose state constitutional rights are violated can recover money damages. In July 2022 the Michigan Supreme Court issued an important decision agreeing with our arguments and broadly establishing that in most circumstances, someone whose rights under the Michigan Constitution are violated by a state officer may sue the state and receive monetary compensation for their injuries. (Bauserman v. Unemployment Insurance Agency; ACLU Attorneys Phil Mayor and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Julie Hurwitz of the National Lawyers Guild.)

Food Assistance Cut Off Without Due Process. The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services (MDHHS) cut off food assistance to Walter Barry, a low-income, developmentally disabled adult, because Mr. Barry's identity had been used by someone else who committed a crime. Under a MDHHS policy that automatically denies food assistance to anyone with an outstanding felony warrant, Mr. Barry's benefits were terminated, even after he proved at an administrative hearing that the warrant was based on a crime that was committed by someone else. Under federal food assistance law, states cannot terminate assistance based on outstanding warrants unless the state first determines that the person receiving benefits is in fact fleeing from justice. In 2013 the Center for Civil Justice and the ACLU of Michigan filed a class action lawsuit seeking to ensure that individuals like Mr. Barry do not go hungry due to the state's unlawful policy. In 2015 Judge Judith Levy issued a decision ruling that MDHHS could not deny benefits to people like Mr. Barry and certifying a class of approximately 20,000 people who are eligible for retroactive or future assistance as a result of the case. The state appealed, and in 2016 the Sixth Circuit affirmed Judge Levy's decision, clearing the way to restore an estimated $60 million in retroactive food assistance benefits owed to low-income households. In 2017 and 2018 we negotiated with the state to ensure that the retroactive benefits were properly paid, and since that time we have continued to monitor payouts and to negotiate with DHHS to ensure that the new policies they are developing comply with federal law and due process. The case was closed in 2021. (Barry v. Lyon; ACLU Attorney Miriam Aukerman; co-counsel Jacqueline Doig, Katie Linehan, Elan Nichols, Mario Azzi, and Linda Jordan of the Center for Civil Justice.)

Right to Representation in Eviction Cases. Detroit's eviction court, the largest district court in the state and one of the busiest in the country, hears approximately 30,000 eviction cases per year, but almost none of the tenants are represented by lawyers in court. Legal aid groups serving low-income tenants in their eviction cases can only cover a fraction of the legal need, and Detroit is facing an eviction crisis now that rental housing aid and supports from the COVID-19 pandemic are ending. In 2020 the ACLU of Michigan began working with a coalition to provide the legal support and analysis needed to craft a city ordinance that would address this problem. In May 2022 these efforts paid off when the Detroit City Council passed a comprehensive right-to-counsel ordinance guaranteeing full legal representation to all indigent tenants facing eviction in the 36th District Court in Detroit. (ACLU Attorney Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio.)

Homeless Encampment Evictions in Detroit. In June 2020, after learning that the City of Detroit displaced more than 40 unhoused individuals from encampments around the city, the ACLU of Michigan along with the National Law Center on Homeless and Poverty, Street Democracy, and students from Street Medicine units at Wayne State University and Michigan State University wrote a letter to the city urging an immediate cessation to all homeless encampment evictions during the COVID-19 pandemic unless the city could offer individual housing units to people living at those locations. The letter asked the city to adopt a policy that protected the unhoused population and their property based on guidance from the Centers of Disease Control and Prevention and the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services. In July 2021 the city approved a new policy that requires any removal of an encampment to be conducted according to CDC guidelines. ## PRISONERS' RIGHTS

COVID-19 in County Jails. During the COVID-19 crisis, jails and prisons failed to take basic measures to protect incarcerated people from catching the deadly coronavirus. Social distancing in jail is impossible, quarantining and contact tracing procedures were lax or non-existent, and jails failed to take simple hygiene measures like ensuring that people had sufficient soap and cleaning supplies. In April 2020 the ACLU of Michigan and coalition partners filed a federal class action lawsuit against the Oakland County Jail for violating the constitutional rights of detainees by exposing them to an unacceptable risk of contagion. Judge Linda Parker granted our motions for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction, ordered the jail to improve its conditions and policies, and established a process for medically vulnerable inmates to seek release on bail. Unfortunately, in July 2020 the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the decision by a vote of 2-1. The case then returned to the district court, where the jail filed a motion to dismiss the lawsuit. Judge Parker denied the motion to dismiss. In June 2021 we reached a settlement agreement that would require the jail to offer vaccines to all inmates, promote the vaccine using videos and literature attesting to its safety and efficacy, and undertake other strong measures recommended by the CDC to promote health and safety in the jail. The settlement was approved in July 2021, and we monitored its implementation through the end of that year. (Cameron v. Bouchard; ACLU Attorneys Phil Mayor, Syeda Davidson, and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Marques Banks, Thomas Harvey, and Krithika Santhanam of the Advancement Project, Alex Twinem and Alec Karakatsanis of Civil Rights Corps, Cary McGehee and Kevin Carlson of Pitt McGehee Palmer & Rivers, and Allison Kriger of LaRene & Kriger.)

Jail Refuses to Provide Medication for Opioid Use Disorder. Jails and prisons are legally required to provide medical care to all who come into their custody, but many refuse to provide medication for opioid use disorder, the medical condition commonly referred to as opioid addiction. More than 20% of people incarcerated in Michigan suffer from this condition, which can be safely and effectively treated with FDA-approved medications but can be extremely painful and even deadly if not treated. In October 2021 the ACLU of Michigan filed a federal lawsuit against the Grand Traverse County on behalf of Cyrus Patson, a young man who battles opioid use disorder and treats it with physician-prescribed Suboxone. Mr. Patson was about to be sentenced to serve time in the county jail, which had a policy of not allowing inmates to take medication for opioid use disorder, and had in fact withheld medication from Mr. Patson during a previous jail sentence, causing him to suffer extremely painful withdraw symptoms and even contemplate suicide. Soon after we filed our lawsuit, Judge Robert Jonker issued an order strongly suggesting that the jail's policy violated the Eighth Amendment and/or the Americans with Disabilities Act, and encouraging the parties to negotiate. In January 2022 the case settled after the jail agreed to provide Mr. Patson his medication and pay our attorneys' fees. (Patson v. Grand Traverse County, ACLU Attorneys Syeda Davidson, Phil Mayor, and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Alexandra Valenti, Amelie Hopkins, and Christine Armellino of Goodwin Procter.)

Prioritizing COVID-19 Vaccines for People in Prison. COVID-19 ravaged jail and prison populations across the country, and Michigan's prisons were among the hardest hit, with more than 25,000 cases and more than 120 deaths. The development of safe and effective COVID-19 vaccines in late 2020 provided hope that there was an end in sight. However, when Michigan released its statewide vaccination plan prioritizing vulnerable populations that lived and worked in congregate settings, incarcerated people were conspicuously absent from the list. After months of working with other advocacy groups urging state officials to revise their vaccine prioritization plan to include incarcerated people, the ACLU of Michigan informed the governor's office in March 2021 that we planned to go to court within days if the state's policy did not immediately change. In response, the state revised its policy, prioritized incarcerated people along with other vulnerable groups living in congregate settings, and offered all 30,000 state prisoners access to a COVID-19 vaccine. (ACLU Attorneys Syeda Davidson, Dan Korobkin, and Phil Mayor; Cooperating Attorneys Andrew Dulberg, Julia Prochazka, Chaz Kelsh, and Ivan Panchenko of WilmerHale.)

Protecting Minors in Adult Jails. Federal and state laws require jails and prisons to protect minors from physical and sexual abuse, including by keeping minors physically separate from adults. However, despite that legal requirement, in July 2021 a Michigan judge refused to intervene when a minor was housed with adults after being sent to an adult jail, citing a provision of the Michigan Court Rules which stated that minors who have been waived into the adult criminal system are not required to be kept separate from adults. In October 2021 the ACLU of Michigan wrote a letter to the Michigan Supreme Court asking them to change this rule to align with federal and state law, and also take additional measures to prevent jails from using solitary confinement as a convenient tool for keeping minors separate from adults. In December 2021 the Court amended the court rules in line with our request and simultaneously invited public comments on the new amendment. In February 2022 we submitted a public comment to once again emphasize the importance of keeping minors separate from adults without resorting to throwing kids into solitary confinement. In May 2022 the Supreme Court affirmed its amendment and also opened a new file to consider our proposal to reduce the use of solitary confinement. (ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Ramis Wadood, Phil Mayor, and Dan Korobkin.)

PRIVACY AND TECHNOLOGY

Facial Recognition Technology Leads to False Arrest. The use of facial recognition surveillance technology has been shown to be inaccurate, racially biased, and a threat to personal privacy. In 2019 the ACLU of Michigan and a coalition of civil rights organizations sent a letter urging the Detroit Police Department to end the use of this dangerous technology, but they refused to do so. A miscarriage of justice of the kind we had warned about then came to light. In January 2020, Detroit police officers arrested Robert Williams on his front lawn, in front of his wife and two young daughters, on charges that he had stolen watches from a Shinola store in Detroit. The arrest was based almost entirely on a facial recognition scan from security footage at the Shinola store, but it was dead wrong: Mr. Williams was not the man in the security footage and was nowhere near the store at the time of the theft. In April 2021 the ACLU filed a federal lawsuit against the Detroit Police Department, alleging that the officers involved violated Mr. Williams’ rights under the Fourth Amendment and the Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act by arresting him on the basis of this flawed technology. (Williams v. City of Detroit; ACLU of Michigan Attorneys Phil Mayor, Ramis Wadood, and Dan Korobkin; National ACLU Attorney Nathan Freed Wessler; co-counsel Michael J. Steinberg of U-M Law School, with student attorneys Eilidh Jenness, Ben Mordechai-Strongin, Jeremy Shur, and Deborah Won.)

RACIAL JUSTICE

Home Purchase Scheme Targeting Black Homebuyers. In the wake of the housing crash of 2008, Black communities have been targeted by predatory “land contract” schemes that advertise the dream of home ownership but are structured to fail. One company, Vision Property Management, engaged in predatory lending schemes across the United States by tricking consumers into signing rent-to-own contracts carrying the promise of homeownership but none of the rights. Vision purchased over 1,000 dilapidated properties in Michigan and sold them to unsuspecting homebuyers. Vision’s contracts obscured the true cost of buying and repairing the home, the interest rate, and the term of the loan; made it nearly impossible for buyers to achieve homeownership; and allowed Vision to avoid responsibility for upkeep. Vision also marketed its product primarily to low-income Black consumers. In September 2020 the ACLU of Michigan, NAACP Legal Defense Fund (LDF), National Consumer Law Center (NCLC), and Michigan Poverty Law Program (MPLP) filed a federal class action lawsuit against Vision and its main funder Atalaya on behalf of lower-income and Black Michigan consumers who were the primary targets of Vision’s predatory home purchase scheme. The lawsuit sets forth claims under the Federal Fair Housing Act, Truth in Lending Act, Equal Credit Opportunity Act, and various state laws. In August 2021 Judge Sean Cox denied Atalaya's motion to dismiss, allowing the case to proceed. (Henderson v. Vision Property Management; ACLU Attorneys Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Coty Montag and Jennifer Holmes of LDF, Stuart Rossman and Sarah Mancini of NCLC, and Lorry Brown of MPLP.)

Racial Profiling by the Michigan State Police. In 2016 the Michigan State Police (MSP) disclosed that troopers are evaluated in part on how many traffic stops they make. The ACLU of Michigan wrote to MSP's director urging that this policy be terminated because of the risk that it would lead to racial profiling. Because of the policy, troopers with an insufficient number of stops are more likely to target for groundless or arbitrary stops individuals whom they perceive to be powerless to effectively complain, which disproportionately includes people of color. Additionally, we inquired about whether troopers record the racial identities of drivers stopped, and whether there are procedures in place to monitor racial patterns of stops and to remedy practices that are racially discriminatory. In response to the ACLU's concerns, MSP acknowledged that it lacked reliable information about the race of the drivers it stops, and in 2017 revised its policies to require that state troopers record that information. Following the change in policy, we used Freedom of Information Act requests to obtain records reflecting the racial identities of drivers stopped. These records revealed disturbing racial patterns of stops made by certain members of a unit charged with the task of drug interdiction. Extensive efforts to persuade MSP to engage an expert to diagnose the reasons for the racial disparities resulted only in the agency engaging consultants to document the existence of already known disparities. Consequently, in June 2021 we filed a federal lawsuit on behalf of Camara Sankofa and Shanelle Thomas, an African American couple stopped by MSP troopers without cause, made to exit their vehicle, subjected to K-9 and manual searches, and interrogated about narcotics. After 90 minutes of the unconstitutional detention, they were allowed to leave without a ticket or even a warning. In October 2022 the lawsuit was settled after MSP finally engaged an independent expert to inquire into the reasons for racial disparities in traffic stops. The settlement agreement allows the ACLU to communicate with the experts and receive a copy of their analysis, and will also pay damages to Sankofa and Thomas and attorneys' fees to the ACLU. (Sankofa v. Rose; ACLU Attorneys Mark P. Fancher and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorney Nakisha Chaney of Salvatore Prescott.)

Water Shutoffs in Detroit. In 2014 the Detroit Water and Sewage Department (DWSD) commenced the largest residential water shutoff in U.S. history and terminated water service to over 20,000 Detroit residents for lack of payment, without regard to residents' health needs or ability to pay. DWSD's internal documents revealed that due to its sloppy billing practices, it had not charged many customers for sewer service for several years. DWSD demanded a lump sum payment from customers for those charges which many of the city's impoverished residents could not afford to pay. Other documents also revealed that residents with delinquent accounts were billed for charges incurred by previous tenants. The ACLU of Michigan joined a lawsuit that sought to restore water service to the city's residents and stop future shutoffs, but in 2016 the Sixth Circuit affirmed the lower courts' dismissal of the case. Advocacy resumed in 2018 in response to media reports of plans to shut off the water of 17,000 households. In 2019 the ACLU and a coalition of attorneys unsuccessfully petitioned the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services, and then Governor Whitmer, to declare a public health emergency and impose a moratorium on shutoffs to prevent the spread of disease. Then, an investigation by our partners at the NAACP Legal Defense Fund (LDF) revealed dramatic racial disparities in water shutoffs, as they are far more likely to occur in majority-Black neighborhoods than in neighborhoods where Blacks are less than 50% of the population. In July 2020 the coalition filed a new lawsuit against the Governor and the City of Detroit alleging that the water shutoffs violate due process, equal protection, the Fair Housing Act, and state law. In August 2020 the defendants filed motions to dismiss, which remain pending. Meanwhile, the city's self-imposed moratorium on water shutoffs is set to expire at the end of 2022. The city has also developed an income-based affordability plan—an idea we have long encouraged—but which is fatally flawed by the city's frank admission that the program contemplates continuing to impose water shutoffs for what will likely be significant numbers of households. (Lyda v. City of Detroit; Taylor v. City of Detroit; ACLU Attorneys Mark P. Fancher, Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio, and Dan Korobkin; additional attorneys include Alice Jennings of Edwards & Jennings, Coty Montag, Monique Lin-Luse, and Jason Bailey of LDF, Lorry Brown, Melissa El-Johnson, and Kurt Thornbladh.)

Racially Hostile Work Environment in the Detroit Police Department. In 2017 Detroit Police Chief James Craig was provided with the report of the Committee on Race and Equality (CORE), a special investigative committee he had established in response to complaints of discrimination within the department. The report found that high-ranking command staff had engaged in racial discrimination, intimidation, and retaliation, that the department had a “racial problem,” and that racism was directed from command staff to the rank and file. Chief Craig rejected the findings of the report, however, and suspended CORE's work. Just days later, Johnny Strickland, an African American police officer who had been with the department for ten years, was confronted, accosted, handcuffed and detained without cause by several white officers. Officer Strickland was off duty and inadvertently entered a suspected crime scene under investigation. Although Strickland identified himself as a police officer, one white officer continually screamed profanities in Strickland's face and sarcastically ridiculed his tenure on the police force, calling him “stupid,” “dumb,” and an “idiot.” Another white officer purposely tightened handcuffs in order to cause injury, and still another conducted an unauthorized, unjustified K-9 search of Strickland's vehicle. In 2018 the ACLU of Michigan filed a federal lawsuit on Officer Strickland's behalf, alleging racial discrimination, a racially hostile work environment, and retaliation. As part of our discovery in the case, the court ordered Chief Craig to sit for a deposition. In November 2019 Judge Nancy Edmunds dismissed the lawsuit, ruling that there was not enough evidence of discrimination, racial hostility, and retaliation to proceed with the case. In April 2021 the Sixth Circuit reversed, ruling that the retaliation and excessive force claims should proceed to trial. A trial in the case is scheduled for November 2022 (Strickland v. City of Detroit; ACLU Attorneys Mark P. Fancher, Dan Korobkin, and Syeda Davidson; Cooperating Attorney Leonard Mungo.)

Discriminatory Tax Foreclosures. Homeowners in Detroit are experiencing a severe tax foreclosure crisis, with many losing their homes based on their inability to pay taxes that never should have been assessed in the first place. Even though taxes in Michigan must be based on the true cash value of a home, the City of Detroit failed to reduce the tax assessments to match plummeting property values following the Great Recession. Also, although homeowners who meet the federal poverty guidelines are excused from paying property taxes, Detroit's process for obtaining the poverty exemption became so convoluted that few people who qualify could actually receive the benefit. These policies have a grossly disparate impact on African American homeowners, who are ten times more likely to lose their homes than non-African Americans. In 2016 the ACLU of Michigan, NAACP Legal Defense Fund (LDF), and the Covington & Burling law firm filed a lawsuit asserting violations of the Fair Housing Act and due process. In July 2018 we reached a historic settlement agreement with Detroit that has the potential to save the homes of thousands of low-income residents. Under the terms of the settlement, homeowners who qualify for a poverty exemption can buy their homes back for $1000, and Detroit created a streamlined, user-friendly poverty exemption application process. Detroit also paid damages to the named plaintiffs and contributed $275,000 to a fund that will help low-income homeowners. In 2019 and 2020 we continued to work with the city and community partner organizations to make sure that the settlement is properly implemented through a three-year enforcement period. In July 2021 we joined LDF in filing a friend-of-the-court brief in a case raising similar claims in the Sixth Circuit, this time seeking damages on behalf of homeowners who had been harmed by the overassessments before new policies were put in place. In July 2022 the Sixth Circuit agreed with our position that the state's process for addressing a retroactive problem with tax assessment notices had been so convoluted and dysfunctional that homeowners can seek relief in federal court. (MorningSide Community Organization v. Wayne County Treasurer; Howard v. City of Detroit; ACLU Attorneys Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Coty Montag and Ajmel Quereshi of LDF, and Shankar Duraiswamy, Amia Trigg, Donald Ridings, Wesley Wintermyer, Sarah Tremont, and Jason Grimes of Covington & Burling.)

Police in the Schools. A lawsuit was filed against the Detroit Public School District over an incident in which a public school police officer and an assistant superintendent used excessive force against a 14-year-old student, breaking his jaw. After the district court refused to dismiss the lawsuit, the school district appealed. In the Sixth Circuit, the ACLU filed a friend-of-the-court brief highlighting the well-documented dangers of overpolicing our schools. Instead of improving safety, police in schools exacerbate the school-to-prison pipeline, disproportionately use force on students of color, and cause physical injury and emotional trauma that deprives students of their right to a public education. In March 2022 the Sixth Circuit agreed with our legal position and affirmed the trial court's denial of the motion to dismiss. (E.W. v. Detroit Public School District; National ACLU Attorneys Amreeta Mathai, Sarah Hinger, and Alexis Agathocleous; ACLU of Michigan Attorney Dan Korobkin; co-counsel Corrine Irish and Colter Paulson of Squire Patton Boggs.)

Business Owners' Duty to Respond to Racist Violence. Edward Tyson is an African American man who was the victim of violence outside a bar in a small town in Cheboygan County. His assailant, widely known as a belligerent racist, repeatedly called Mr. Tyson the N word and punched him in the head until he lay on the ground bleeding. The operators of the bar knew about the assault but took no action to protect Tyson, did not ask the assailant to leave, and did not even call the police. Tyson sued both his assailant and the owners of the bar in state court, but the trial court dismissed his case against the bar, ruling that they had no duty to protect or help him. On appeal, the ACLU of Michigan filed a friend-of-the-court brief, arguing that due to the history of private acts of racial violence at places of public accommodation and the constitutional requirement that courts provide equal protection under the law, Michigan law should be understood to require that merchants make their premises equally safe for members of all races. In April 2021 the Michigan Court of Appeals reversed the trial court's dismissal of Tyson's lawsuit, ruling that business owners have a duty to use reasonable care to protect their identifiable invitees from the foreseeable criminal acts of third parties, and a jury in Tyson's case could find that the operators of the bar had a duty to call the police. (Tyson v. Dawkins; ACLU Attorneys Mark P. Fancher and Dan Korobkin; Cooperating Attorney Samuel Bagenstos.)

Police Brutality Downriver. In October 2021 the ACLU of Michigan filed a complaint with the U.S. Department of Justice, urging its Civil Rights Division to investigate the Taylor Police Department for racially biased policing and its excessive use of force. Our complaint followed years of investigating reports from multiple sources that the police department had become one of the most violent and lawless in the state. Taylor is in what is referred to as the “downriver” region near Detroit. It is 78 percent white and 16 percent Black; nearly 25 percent of the population is under the age of 18, and 11 percent are below the poverty line. Taylor’s police department employs 75 officers, but the first African American officer was not hired until 2012. Our complaint highlighted 20 instances of excessive force, punishment of citizens for what is sometimes called “contempt of cop,” unlawful use of tasers to force compliance with police orders, racially disparate hostile conduct, waivers of liability induced by blackmail over criminal charges, and hostile, incompetent leadership. We were notified that our petition was referred to the Criminal Section of the Justice Department’s Civil Rights Division for review. (ACLU Attorney Mark P. Fancher.)

Police Shootings in Detroit. In July 2020 a squadron of Detroit Police Department officers approached a young African American man to make an arrest on a residential street. Hakim Littleton, the arrestee’s companion, apparently drew a pistol and fired a shot in the direction of the officers, who returned fire in a hail of bullets, killing Littleton. In the immediate aftermath of the incident, Police Chief James Craig released video footage of the event along with narrative commentary of what occurred. The ACLU of Michigan joined in coalition with other legal and community organizations to question the account given by the police after our review of the video footage revealed factual inconsistencies and contradictions in the police account. Most notably, the video appears to show that Littleton had been fully subdued by officers and was alive on the ground when one officer fired a shot into Littleton’s head at close range. An investigation by the Wayne County Prosecutor’s Office, however, exonerated the officers involved. In 2021 the coalition’s work expanded due to an escalating pattern of violence by Detroit police officers. In May 2022 the coalition submitted to the U.S. Department of Justice a comprehensive memorandum that detailed a long history of abuse, racial discrimination, and corruption in the Detroit Police Department along with a request that the Justice Department open an investigation and intervene in Detroit police operations. The Department of Justice spent 13 years monitoring the police department’s compliance with a consent decree before departing in 2016, but the coalition’s memo requested that they return because of escalating uses of force, hundreds of unresolved citizen complaints, poor leadership, racially targeted prosecutions for carrying concealed weapons, and a repressive police culture. (ACLU Attorney Mark P. Fancher.)

Racial Insensitivity in Brighton Public Schools. The ACLU of Michigan is representing a white mother and her adopted African American son in a challenge to racial insensitivity in the Brighton school district. When her child was in second grade and the only Black child in his class, he decided to grow dreadlocks. In response to inquiries about his hair by classmates, his teacher placed a knit cap with artificial dreadlocks attached to the inside band on the child’s head and told the class the child’s hair would resemble the artificial locks when fully grown. When the child was told to look at himself in the bathroom mirror, the other students laughed at him. The child’s mother complained that the teacher humiliated her son by using him as an involuntary prop, but the principal dismissively claimed that the child was given advance notice of the demonstration and welcomed it. The principal also refused the mother's request to arrange cultural competence training for the staff. In 2019 we filed a complaint asking the Michigan Department of Civil Rights to investigate. In 2021 racial problems in Brighton surfaced again when white Brighton High School students' racist and homophobic social media posts went public. In response to the posts and community reactions, the ACLU wrote to the interim director of MDCR reminding him of the second grader's pending complaint and explaining the racial hazards of maintaining a school district like Brighton's which is racially homogeneous. The letter requested that MDCR use its resources to urge the district to take affirmative steps to ensure that Brighton students have opportunities to interact with students of diverse backgrounds, and suggested specific strategies for cross-racial learning and curriculum that would provide students with a greater appreciation for the lives, histories and cultures of communities different from their own. In 2022 the MDCR investigator assigned to the case reported that she would be recommending to the agency's legal department that they make a finding of discrimination. (ACLU Attorney Mark P. Fancher.)

Elimination of University's Track and Field Program. A 2021 announcement that the men's track and field program at Central Michigan University was being eliminated for fiscal reasons sparked a movement by students, alumni and others to have the program reinstated. Of great concern is the fact that nationally, there are more African American male athletes in men's NCAA track than in all other minor sports combined. Because CMU's student body is 73% white, 11% African American, and 5% Latino, eliminating the track program also eliminates a program that impacts the racial demographics of a university that is underserving people of color in the broader community. In April 2021 the ACLU of Michigan sent a letter to the president of the university urging him to reinstate the track program, explaining that for decades such programs have offered many Black students a way out of oppressive poverty, allowing to flourish as student athletes in what has become one of the American public university's most significant contributions to social mobility. The president did not respond, and in September 2021 we followed up with a letter to the university's trustees that expressed heightened and more specific concerns. In April 2022 the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights announced that it would investigate CMU for racial discrimination (ACLU Attorney Mark P. Fancher.)

Water Shutoffs in Saginaw. When a statewide moratorium on water shutoffs that was imposed in response to the COVID-19 pandemic expired, Saginaw city officials decided to resume water shutoffs for families that had unpaid water bills. Those affected included 250 families whose water service was terminated immediately and 750 additional families at risk of having their water shut off. In July 2021 the ACLU of Michigan wrote to city officials on behalf of 19 concerned organizations. The letter pointed out that, given Saginaw's racial and economic circumstances, these shutoff practices may violate the Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act, Title VI of the federal Civil Rights Act, and the Fair Housing Act. It also explained that as a practical matter, disconnecting water access in a home during the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic created imminent health risks, exacerbated housing instability, and could threaten parents' rights to keep their children in their homes. The letter urged an end to shutoffs, the adoption of a water affordability plan, and an end to civil penalties related to water utility status. In response, the city resumed moratorium on shutoffs. The moratorium ended in July 2022. (ACLU Attorneys Mark P. Fancher and Bonsitu Kitaba-Gaviglio, and legal intern Rihan Issa.)

Pictures of Black Men at Police Department Firing Range. During a boy scout field trip to the Farmington Hills Police Department, it was discovered that police officers were using enlarged photographs of Black men as target practice on their firing range. A substantial public outcry followed. In July 2022 the ACLU of Michigan wrote to the mayor, city council, and police chief to express concern and emphasize that even if some photographs used for target practice were of white individuals, the police department's use of any shooting targets that depicted Black individuals was problematic. The letter recommended that the targets in controversy be discarded, that professionals interview police personnel to assess their racial attitudes, and that officers undergo training that helps them appreciate the reasons for community alarm. The police chief announced that the targets would be removed pending a review and third-party investigation. (ACLU Attorney Mark P. Fancher; Cooperating Attorney Gillian Talwar.)

Black Power Activist Targeted by Police. Darnell Summers was a black power and black liberation activist in the 1960s, when law enforcement agencies were known to engage in systematic political repression of such movements and even frame key activists for crimes they did not commit. In 1968 he was charged with murdering a Michigan State Police (MSP) detective, but charges were dismissed when the sole eyewitness recanted his testimony. Charges were re-filed against Summers in 1982, but these charges were also dismissed because a second witness recanted her testimony as well. Summers then relocated to Germany, but when he recently visited Michigan he and his family were targeted by MSP for interrogation and a search warrant. In January 2021 the ACLU of Michigan wrote to MSP, stating that if MSP had proper legal cause to persist in the investigation and interrogation of Mr. Summers, then it should, in the spirit of transparency and accountability, share details with the public. We further stated that if the encounters with Mr. Summers were baseless and vindictive, then such conduct should cease immediately. We also sought records related to the investigation through a Freedom of Information Act request, but the records we received were heavily redacted. (ACLU Attorney Mark P. Fancher.)

REPRODUCTIVE FREEDOM

Abortion Rights in Michigan. Following the U.S. Supreme Court's decision overturning Roe v. Wade, Michigan faces an imminent threat to reproductive freedom and access to abortion: an archaic state law from 1931 that criminalizes all abortions except those necessary to save the life of the mother, poised to automatically spring into effect when Roe was overturned. Anticipating in advance that Roe would fall and the 1931 law could end abortion access throughout the state, in March 2022 the ACLU of Michigan worked in coalition to file a lawsuit on behalf of Planned Parenthood of Michigan challenging the 1931 law as a violation of the Michigan Constitution and asking for an immediate statewide injunction against its enforcement. In April 2022 Court of Claims Judge Elizabeth Gleicher agreed with us and issued a preliminary injunction so that abortion access could continue in Michigan. In September 2022 Judge Gleicher issued a final judgment and permanent injunction, ruling that the Michigan Constitution's right to bodily integrity protects access to abortion, and that the 1931 law violates that right as well as the Michigan Constitution's right to equal protection under the law. The Michigan legislature intervened in the lawsuit and has filed an appeal. Meanwhile, anti-abortion prosecutors and organizations have filed a separate lawsuit challenging Judge Gleicher's authority to issue her rulings. We also filed a friend-of-the-court brief in a similar case filed by Governor Whitmer encouraging the Michigan Supreme Court to rule on the state constitutional questions as soon as possible. (Planned Parenthood of Michigan v. Attorney General; In re Jarzynka; *Whitmer v. Reproductive Freedom for All. In March 2022, the ACLU of Michigan, Michigan Voices and Planned Parenthood Advocates of Michigan launched the Reproductive Freedom for All campaign. The campaign is a citizen-led ballot initiative to amend the Michigan Constitution to explicitly affirm that every individual has a fundamental right to reproductive freedom, which includes the right to make and effectuate all decisions related to their pregnancy, including contraception, sterilization, miscarriage management, prenatal and postnatal care, abortion and infertility. ACLU attorneys led the collaborative process to draft the unique constitutional amendment and seek feedback from local and national stakeholders and impacted individuals. By July 2022, the coalition and volunteers collected over 730,000 signatures from registered Michigan voters to put the measure on the November 2022 ballot. Denial of Healthcare Based on Religious Policies. Providers at Catholic-run hospitals, which are becoming increasingly prevalent in our healthcare system, are required to abide by the Ethical and Religious Directives for Catholic Health Care Services—a set of policies promulgated by the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops that use religious principles, rather than medical science, to govern care. At Ascension Providence Hospital in Southfield, a 38-year-old patient who was pregnant with her third child and preparing to deliver by Cesarean section was advised by her longtime OB/GYN that this pregnancy should be her last, as her bladder and uterus had fused together, which would make it dangerous for her to become pregnant. Ordinarily, the doctor performing her C-section would offer to also perform a tubal ligation (commonly known as having one’s tubes tied). However, the OB/GYN who had been treating her for years was prohibited from performing a tubal ligation at Ascension Providence because the religious directives prohibit sterilization. In July 2021 the ACLU sent a letter urging Ascension to provide an exemption from the religious directive in this case of medically recommended care, and filed an administrative complaint with Michigan’s Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs (LARA). In August 2021, after receiving no response from Ascension, we also filed a complaint with the Office for Civil Rights at the United States Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). In December 2021 LARA declined to take any action on the complaint. The HHS complaint remains open, but unfortunately the client was forced to seek out a new practitioner in a different healthcare system to have the necessary medical procedure. ## VOTING RIGHTS

---

Local Control Over the Detroit City Charter. For two years the democratically elected commission to revise Detroit’s city charter worked with community groups to adopt more progressive policies for the city, and they presented their proposed charter to Governor Whitmer in March 2021 with the intent that it be placed on the ballot for approval or rejection by Detroit’s voters in the August 2021 election. However, the governor raised objections to parts of the proposed charter, and opponents of the charter took the position that it could not go on the ballot without the governor’s approval. A trial-court judge in Wayne County and the Michigan Court of Appeals agreed, ordering the charter removed from the ballot. The dispute then went before the Michigan Supreme Court, and in June 2021 the ACLU of Michigan joined the Sugar Law Center in filing a friend-of-the-court brief on behalf of Wayne State law professors who argued that the Michigan Constitution allows the charter to be put before the voters regardless of whether the Governor has approved. In July 2021 the Supreme Court agreed with our position and reversed the decisions of the lower court. Detroit voters ended up choosing not to approve the new charter. (Sheffield v. Detroit City Clerk; ACLU Attorneys Mark P. Fancher and Dan Korobkin; co-counsel John Philo of Sugar Law Center.)

Signature Gathering for Ballot Initiatives. In 2018 the legislature enacted a mean-spirited anti-petitioning law designed to make it more difficult to collect enough signatures to place new initiatives on the ballot. The new law put a cap on the number of signatures that can be collected from any one congressional district (thereby diluting the ability of African American voters to place initiatives on the ballot), and required paid petition circulators to register with the state before they can start collecting signatures. Attorney General Dana Nessel announced that she would consider issuing an attorney general’s opinion regarding the constitutionality of the new statute and invited interested parties to submit legal memos to assist her office. In February 2019 the ACLU of Michigan submitted a 12-page letter arguing that the new law violates the Michigan Constitution, the First Amendment, and the Voting Rights Act. In May 2019 Nessel issued a formal attorney general’s opinion adopting our analysis and declaring the new statute unconstitutional. The case was then taken up in court, and we filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the Michigan Supreme Court again arguing that the new law is unconstitutional. In December 2020, however, the Supreme Court declined to rule on the merits of the case, dismissing it as moot because the plaintiff organization that had filed the lawsuit was no longer seeking to have an initiative placed on the ballot. The case returned to court the following year, and in October 2021 we filed another friend-of-the-court brief in the Michigan Court of Appeals. The court issued a ruling agreeing with our position regarding the 15% cap and the registration requirement, but upholding the disclosure requirement. In January 2022 the Michigan Supreme Court affirmed. (League of Women Voters of Michigan v. Secretary of State; ACLU Attorneys Dan Korobkin and Sharon Dolente; Cooperating Attorneys Sam Bagenstos and Eli Savit of U-M Law School.)

“Adopt and Amend” Legislative Maneuver Guts Ballot Initiatives. In 2018 citizens collected enough signatures to place initiatives on the ballot that would raise the minimum wage and guarantee paid sick time. But instead of allowing citizens to vote on these important measures at the November 2018 election, the Michigan legislature adopted them into law in order to keep them off the ballot—and then proceeded to gut them as soon as the election was over. This cynical move, which is unprecedented in Michigan history, was challenged in the Michigan Supreme Court through a request by the legislature for an advisory opinion about whether the “adopt and amend” strategy is constitutional. In June 2019 the ACLU of Michigan led a coalition of organizations in filing a friend-of-the-court brief arguing that it is not. Unfortunately, in December 2019 the Supreme Court issued an order dismissing the case and declining to issue a ruling. However, the case returned to court a few years later, and in September 2022 we filed another friend-of-the-court brief, this time in the Court of Appeals. City Clerk Closes Office One Week Before Election. Thanks to the passage of Proposal 3 in 2018, Michigan's Constitution guarantees that during the 40 days before an election, voters have the right to apply for, receive, and submit an absentee ballot either by mail or in person. And by state law, city and township clerks are required to be available to assist voters during regular business hours within that time period. In July 2022 the city clerk in Benton Harbor posted notices that her office would be closed for five full days just a week and a half before the upcoming primary election. The ACLU of Michigan immediately sent a letter to the clerk and the mayor, warning that closing the clerk's office during this 40-day period was unconstitutional. In response, the clerk made arrangements for her staff to assist voters in city hall while she was away, took down the notices that her office would be closed, and replaced them with notices directing people to city hall if they wished to vote.
